Is it good to install photovoltaic panels on the south side of a residential building

Overview

However, a south-facing roof is by no means a necessity for a productive and economically viable solar power system. A rooftop solar power system facing east or west can still generate enough energy to meet your energy demands—particularly if it's paired with a home battery backup. Choosing the best roof location for solar panels maximizes energy production, extends panel life, and simplifies maintenance. In the United States, the most productive installation typically faces south to capture the sun across the year, but real-world results depend on tilt, shading, and roof. In the Northern Hemisphere, the south side of a house is the best location for solar panels, because it is the side that receives the most direct sunlight. This orientation provides: Energy Production Impact: South-facing panels typically produce 100% of their potential output, serving as the benchmark for all other orientations. This article explains roof orientation, pitch, shading, structural factors, and alternatives to help homeowners choose the optimal roof side for solar panels. Common Assumptions It's common knowledge that the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, suggesting a south-facing roof would maximise.
